ALLEN-TOWN to COOPERSTOWN

From Wampum, Pa., to the Hall of Fame, Dick Allen's power was always on display

BY STEVE WULF

It takes six hours and 52 minutes to drive the 444.8 miles from Wampum, Pa., to Cooperstown, N.Y. That journey is nothing, though, compared to the odyssey that Dick Allen embarked upon when he left Wampum, a small town northwest of Pittsburgh, after Philadelphia Phillies scout Jack Ogden signed him out of high school in 1960.

In between then and this past December, when the Hall of Fame's Classic Baseball Era Committee elected Allen, the seven-time All-Star forged a legend as the Hercules of baseball, a man who could belittle colossal stadiums with his 42-ounce bat, run the bases as if he were a sprite and pass on his incredible grasp of the game to others. And like Hercules, he was given a series of labors to overcome — prejudice, a cage match, a series of career-threatening injuries, thrown beer bottles, misunderstandings and his own set of demons.

Cancer claimed Allen's life on Dec. 7, 2020, four years and one day before his family and admirers got the news they had long been waiting for. Right after the announcement, Philadelphia Eagles defensive coordinator Vic Fangio, a longtime Phillies fan, interrupted his own press conference to sing Allen's praises.

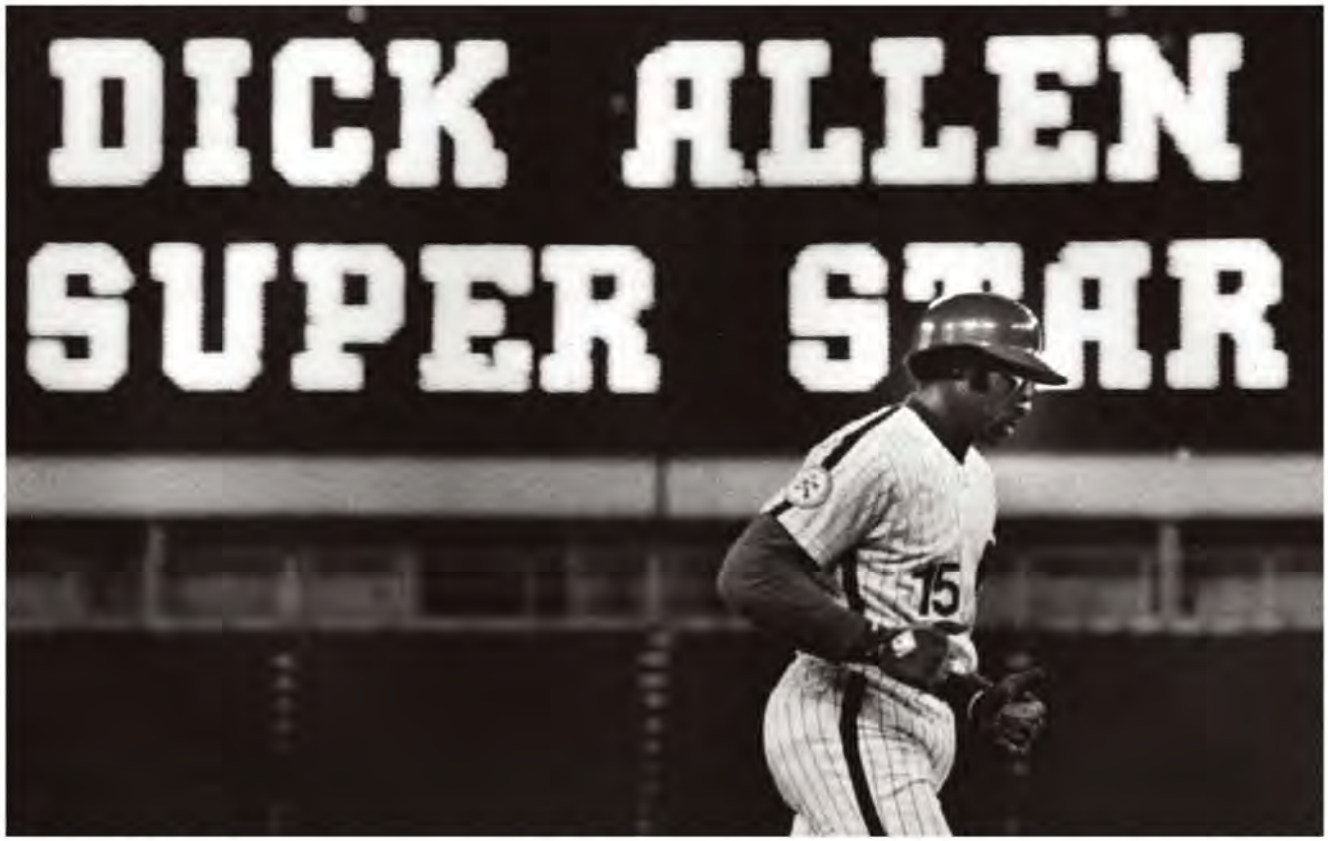
Allen's numbers were epic. He was among the top players in the game in several seasons, including his 1964 National League Rookie of the Year campaign and his 1972 American League Most Valuable Player Award effort.

Hall of Fame pitcher Rich Gossage (2008) had this to say about the committee's selections: "I played 22 seasons, with nine teams and a lot of Hall of Famers, and I consider Dick and [fellow electee] Dave [Parker] to be among the very best who ever played. I'm sorry it took so long for them to be recognized, especially so for Dick, who didn't live to see the day. Man, I would not be in Cooperstown myself had it not been for Dick. He was one bad dude, and I mean that in a good way."

Ferguson Jenkins, inducted in 1991, played with Allen in the Phillies' minor league system and pitched against him many times. "Dick was a true five-tool player, in the same class as Willie Mays and Roberto Clemente and Mickey Mantle," said Jenkins. "He was just a tremendous athlete."

Wampum, Pa., established in 1796 as a Native American trading post, had a population of fewer than 1,000 people when Era Allen, a housekeeper, was raising her nine children in the nearby village of Chewton. According to Era, quoted in the excellent 2017 biography, Dick Allen: The Life and Times of a Baseball Immortal, written by William Kashatus, the young Dick told her when he was 6 or 7, "I'm going to be a big leaguer someday. I'll play on TV, make a big salary and buy you a nice house."

Amazingly enough, the Allen family would produce three big leaguers: Dick; his older brother, Hank; and younger brother, Ron. Dick was the first to make the majors, thanks to a newspaper story about his high school basketball prowess that Ogden had clipped out of the paper because it mentioned Allen was also a power-hitting shortstop. The first time Ogden saw him play, Dick hit two mammoth home runs. As the scout later said: "I'd been looking 30 years for a kid like this, and I wasn't going to lose him."



Ogden pulled out all the stops to convince Era that Allen's future lay in baseball and not college basketball. He brought Negro Leagues legend Judy Johnson along with him on his first visit, promised to sign Hank to a contract and offered Dick a signing bonus of $70,000 —reportedly the highest ever offered to a Black player. The first thing Dick did with the money was buy Era a nice house.

Because it was a town of mill workers, Wampum had neither the time nor the inclination for racial prejudice. And in his first few minor league stops — Elmira (N.Y.), Twin Falls (Idaho) and Williamsport (Pa.) — Allen was welcomed. But then, in 1963, the Phillies sent him to their Triple-A affiliate in Little Rock, Ark. On Opening Night at Ray Winder Stadium, he became one of the first Black players in a professional game in Arkansas. As Allen told Tim Whitaker in Crash, the autobiography they wrote together in 1989: "When I arrived at the park, there were people marching around outside with signs. One said, DON'T NEGRO-IZE BASEBALL. Another, N*R GO HOME… Here, in my mind, I thought Jackie Robinson had Negro-ized baseball 16 years earlier."

Allen batted .289 with 33 homers and 97 RBI in that cauldron of hatred.

Nowadays, the area in north Philadelphia where Connie Mack Stadium once stood is occupied by the Deliverance Evangelistic Church and an adjacent seminary school. There's little to indicate what happened there in 1964.

That was Allen's rookie season, and the season that truly tested the faith of Phillies fans. He nearly carried the team to its first National League pennant since 1950, leading the league in runs, triples, extra-base hits and total bases. Playing the unfamiliar position of third base, he also made a league-leading 41 errors, and demanding fans would ride him for those. At one point in the season, manager Gene Mauch asked, "How can anybody even shape his lips in the form of a boo when a player like Richie Allen comes to bat?"

It certainly wasn't Allen's fault that the Phils lost 10 games in a row down the stretch, or that "Richie Allen Night" came off as tone-deaf when it was staged at the halfway point of the streak. Some blamed the fiery Mauch for squeezing the players too hard and shortening the rotation, but there was plenty of fallout to go around.

"To this day," Allen wrote 25 years later, "I can't set foot in Philadelphia without somebody asking me about the collapse."

The whole city was in a foul mood in '65, and so was Frank Thomas, the aging slugger who was riding the bench on July 3 while Allen was riding high with a .335 average. During batting practice, the two had words. Allen threw a punch, and Thomas hit him on his left shoulder with his bat. It took five Phillies to keep Allen away from Thomas. In the game against the Reds that followed, Allen hit a bases-loaded triple and Thomas a pinch-hit homer, and the two men shook hands. But when the Phillies released Thomas immediately after the game, Allen realized he would be the real fall guy.

"After the Thomas fight," Allen wrote, "all I wanted to do was go home to Wampum, where the game had been fun."

Allen did find the solace of home in Philadelphia's Fairmount Park. He had spent a lot of time with horses growing up in Chewton, so he kept one at the park's stables, showing up at dawn during homestands to ride Blaze as if he were a jockey like his friend, Angel Cordero. The Phillies didn't much like it, but it was hard to argue with Allen, who hit 40 home runs with 110 RBI in '66.

It was another ride that got Dick in trouble the next year. On the rainy night of Aug. 24, 1967, he put his right hand through the front headlight of his stalled 1950 Ford while trying to push it. "On the way to the hospital, all I could think about was what a horrible end this was to my career." Surgeons worked through the night to repair his hand, but there was no telling if it would ever be the same. When he finally felt ready, he tentatively stepped into a batting cage. The hand hurt, but the thought of not playing again hurt more.

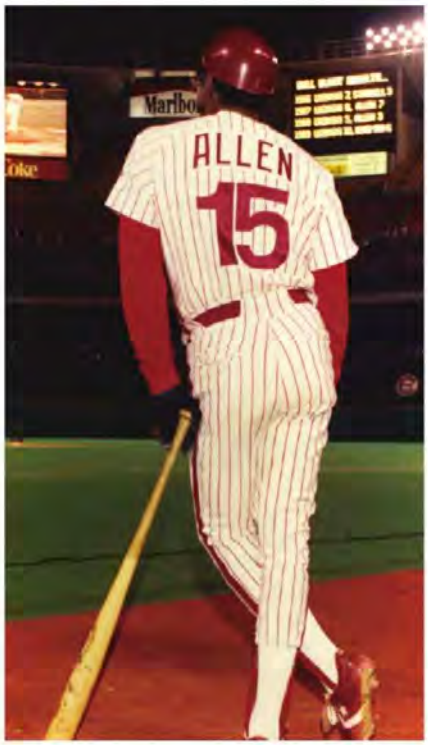
Because Allen could no longer throw the ball effectively, Mauch put him in left field to start the 1968 season. That made him a target for the fans in the left field bleachers. At first, they threw pennies, then bolts, then beer bottles. Allen started wearing a batting helmet in the field, which is how he got the name "Crash" — for crash helmet.

Bob Skinner took over for Mauch midway through the '68 season, but that failed to spark the Phillies, who finished seventh. When Allen asked Bob Carpenter to trade him, the owner advised him to be patient. The next spring, Skinner moved Allen over to first base, which he liked. As of June 24, he was hitting .318 with 19 homers, but the team was struggling along in fifth place, with a doubleheader scheduled at Shea Stadium. Thinking it was a twi-nighter, Allen decided to stop at Monmouth Park to see one of his thoroughbreds run in the third race. Unfortunately, the starting time of the game had been moved up, and Allen didn't find out about it until he heard on the car radio that he had been suspended. The suspension lasted 26 days.

Five days after that '69 season ended, Allen was traded to the Cardinals. In his one season with St. Louis, Allen made the All-Star team and hit 34 homers with 101 RBI. But his reputation had so diminished his value that he was then shipped off to the Dodgers. At first, Allen was thrilled to be wearing the same uniform as his hero, Jackie Robinson, but even he later admitted: "I was off my game." His numbers weren't bad: .295 with 23 homers and 90 RBI. But they weren't what he or the Dodgers expected them to be. And so, he was traded again, this time to the White Sox.

There's an iconic Sports Illustrated cover, dated June 12, 1972, of Allen juggling three baseballs in the White Sox dugout, with a cigarette dangling underneath his mustache. "SEASON OF SURPRISES," reads the cover line, followed by "Chicago's Dick Allen Juggles His Image." Sitting in the dugout that year was a rookie pitcher named Rich Gossage.

"I had arrived in camp as a non-roster pitcher with a year of Class A under my belt," Gossage said. "I could throw a ball through a car wash without it getting wet, but I didn't have a breaking pitch or know anything about baseball. To this day, I thank my lucky stars for the education I got from three people: Chuck Tanner, the manager; Johnny Sain, the pitching coach; and Dick Allen."



Allen lost half of the '73 season with a broken leg sustained in a June collision with Angels first baseman Mike Epstein. Then he lost his love for the game in '74. In the middle of September, while leading the AL in homers with 32, Allen told his teammates that he was retiring. He up and left for his farm outside of Philadelphia. He was 32 years old.

The following spring, Allen had some visitors. Mike Schmidt, Dave Cash and Richie

Ashburn came out to the farm in Perkasie to see if he might be interested in coming back to the Phillies. The three Phils — third baseman, second baseman and legend — thought Dick might be just the right ingredient to put the team over the top.

Eventually, the team worked out a deal with the Braves, who had traded for Allen, and on May 14, in a game at Veterans Stadium against the Reds, he made his second Phillies debut. He got a standing ovation when he stepped to the plate and another when he singled. But when he discovered that his power stroke was gone, he took on a new role as a mentor to his younger teammates.

Indeed, the core of the Phillies' first world championship team in 1980 — Schmidt, Greg Luzinski, Garry Maddox, Bob Boone, Larry Bowa, Tim McCarver, Steve Carlton and Tug McGraw — all benefited from Allen's presence. He wasn't around, though, having called it quits for good in the middle of his '77 season with Oakland.

The following years were rough on him — his horse farm burned down and he got divorced. Then in his first year of Hall of Fame eligibility, 1983, he got just 14 votes out of the 374 cast by the members of the BBWAA. But almost 42 years later, Allen received 13 of a possible 16 votes from the Classic Baseball Era Committee to earn election.

When a player is inducted into the Hall of Fame, he's pulled in a hundred different directions. Such was the case with Gossage when he was honored at the 2008 Induction Weekend. But for one moment, Dick Allen provided a memory that Gossage will never forget.

"It was after the little golf tournament they have, and I was on the back porch of the Otesaga [Hotel], chatting with people. Someone comes up to me and tells me that there are two gentlemen out front who want to say hello. Doesn't give me their names, so I'm thinking they're probably fans wanting an autograph. But I go out to the lobby anyway, and who do I see?

"Chuck Tanner and Dick Allen. Chuck has this big bandage on his neck from the surgery he had just had, and Dick has this big grin on his face. Turns out Dick drove Chuck up from Pittsburgh just to congratulate me. Still makes me tear up."

Billy Wagner's incredible drive and passion brought him to the Hall of Fame

BY JOSE DE JESUS ORTIZ

Almost 30 years later, Billy Wagner can still remember his big league debut as though it were yesterday. Future Hall of Famers Jeff Bagwell and Craig Biggio manned the right side of the infield for the visiting Houston Astros at New York's Shea Stadium on Sept. 13, 1995.

At that point in their careers, few could have guessed that Bagwell, Biggio and Wagner would all be Hall of Famers one day. The Astros organization, after all, wouldn't have a Hall of Fame plaque with the franchise's logo on it until nearly two decades later when Biggio was inducted in 2015.

The Mets' Jeff Kent, one of the greatest slugging second basemen in history, was on first base after hitting a two-out single that prompted the call to the Houston bullpen. Rico Brogna was at the plate in the bottom of the sixth inning.

A little more than 13,000 fans were on hand as the hard-throwing rookie left-hander from southwest Virginia made his debut.

"I don't even remember running in," Wagner said. "I floated in. Facing Rico Brogna, you come set, and who am I looking at? Jeff Bagwell.

"Jeff Kent's the runner and Craig Biggio's the second baseman. That's that epitome of like, 'Holy [smokes], I made it. I'm here.'"

Wagner induced a flyout to center field to end the inning, beginning an improbable journey from the Appalachians in rural Virginia to the National Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y.

Wagner, the first left-handed reliever elected to the Hall of Fame, was a natural right-hander. In many ways, he's still a righty. He writes with his right hand, uses silverware with his right hand and kicks footballs with his right foot.

He might have been a right-handed pitcher if he had not broken his right arm when a boy named Chip fell on his arm when they were playing football near Wagner's grandmother's home. Wagner actually broke his right arm twice.

Not wanting to miss out on childhood play, Wagner taught himself to throw with his left hand. The transformation from a righty to a lefty is just one example of Wagner's perseverance. At 5-foot-10 with tree trunks for thighs, Wagner doesn't look like a prototypical fireballer.

Yet, fire within is what has driven him from poverty in a broken home to enough generational wealth to have retired after his 16th season — the seventh and final All-Star season of his career — to devote himself to his wife and children. The decision to retire at 39 years old with 422 career saves may have cost him some Hall of Fame votes, delaying his election until his 10th and final year of eligibility on the Baseball Writers' Association of America ballot.

To understand Wagner, though, one must start in Marion, Va., where his parents married in 1970 when his dad, William, was 18 years old and his mother, Yvonne, was 16. After Billy was born on July 25, 1971, his father enlisted in the Army and eventually deployed to Saigon.

The marriage was volatile, and Wagner's parents divorced when he was 5 years old. Wagner bounced around between both sets of grandparents before eventually moving in with his uncle and aunt when he was 14.

If you look at Wagner's shoes, you can often find him wearing spotless white sneakers. Even at age 53, he's still buying sneakers he wished he could have been able to afford growing up.

As a child, Wagner usually wore tennis shoes that his mom bought at the local flea market. Those shoes tended to be purple or green because those were often the only ones left over and on discount. Such footwear would draw frequent ridicule from Wagner's classmates.

Unlike his classmates in elementary and middle school, Wagner suffered through hunger at school. Nobody packed him lunch. He usually carried crackers to stave off hunger until he could get his free lunch with the red meal ticket that might as well have been a Scarlet Letter for the proud Wagner.

"I don't think kids realize what it's like to be hungry and to go to school with crackers, get a red tag and get made fun of," Wagner said. "I don't think they would even know how to handle that.

"So, that's what drove me. When you go through these times that harden you, those are the things that you lean on."

Crackers often represented the only meal Wagner had for breakfast and dinner when he lived in a trailer with his mother and sister from ages 9 through 12. He moved in with his grandparents when he was 13.

By the time he moved in with his father for high school, Wagner had already attended 10 different schools. He proudly states that he was the best C student in high school, although he still remembers the teacher who told him he wouldn't amount to anything.

He was a late bloomer and always among the shortest kids in his class, but he blossomed just in time to be recruited to Division III Ferrum College.

Wagner went to Ferrum to play football, but he eventually became the baseball team's star pitcher. He lit up the radar there, drawing big league scouts to the school.

The Astros selected him in the first round of the 1993 June Draft with the 12th overall pick. A little more than two years later, he made his debut with the No. 13 on his back.

Two years after that, in 1997, he was a key part of an Astros squad that would set a then-franchise record with five consecutive playoff appearances.

"We had Bagwell and Craig Biggio and Ken Caminiti, but Billy came in and made the Houston Astros better," said former Astros owner Drayton McLane. "He had outstanding ability and accomplishments and character. Billy had great character. And his position as a closer was exactly what we needed. He really filled a need.

"He was one of the very first pitchers throwing 100 mph. I can just remember how excited our fans were when he came in throwing that fastball. He brought a great deal of excitement and success to the Astros."

Wagner was 47-40 with a 2.31 ERA and those 422 saves over 16 seasons between the Astros, Phillies, Mets, Red Sox and Braves. He played nine seasons with the Astros, setting the franchise's all-time saves record with 225.

When he retired, he ranked fifth on baseball's all-time saves list. Now he's eighth. Hall of Famers Mariano Rivera (652), Trevor Hoffman (601) and Lee Smith (478) are baseball's top three saves leaders. Kenley Jansen (447), Craig Kimbrel (440), Francisco Rodríguez (437) and John Franco (424) are the only others with more saves than Wagner.

Franco, the only lefty with more saves, pitched in the majors for 21 seasons, five more than Wagner. Among Hall of Fame relievers, Rivera and Wagner are either first or second in opponents' batting average, WHIP, ERA and ERA+. And Wagner is first among Hall of Fame relievers with 11.92 strikeouts per nine innings. Hoffman ranks a distant second (9.36).

"I really thought Billy Wagner was as deserving of the Hall of Fame as any closer because he was so dominating," Hall of Famer Nolan Ryan said.

"Look at Billy's numbers in 1999," Bagwell said. "They were stupid."

Wagner went 4-1 with a 1.57 ERA and 39 saves that season. He struck out 124 batters over 74.2 innings — with an amazing 14.9 strikeouts per nine innings.

He also earned his first All-Star nod in 1999 and finished fourth in the National League Cy Young Award race and 16th in NL MVP voting. Ten years later, at 37 years old, he again averaged 14.9 strikeouts per nine innings while splitting time between the Mets and Red Sox. Granted, he was limited to 15.2 innings after recovering from injury.

He signed with the Atlanta Braves prior to the 2010 season and earned his final All-Star berth. Despite going 7-2 with a career-best 1.43 ERA, 37 saves and 104 strikeouts in 69.1 innings, Wagner retired to head back to southwest Virginia. He wanted to be with his wife, Sarah, and their four young children. Wagner wanted to give his kids that devoted dad he longed for as a child.

"He's a guy who left the game with like a 'high 1, low 2' ERA with a bunch of saves," Bagwell said. "He could have played a lot longer. When he played, he was dominant."

Wagner's decision to retire stopped him from accumulating saves. Former Mets teammate Tom Glavine and former Braves teammate Chipper Jones are among the Hall of Famers who are adamant that Wagner could have pitched several more seasons.

Family, though, was Wagner's goal. He was driven on the field by the hunger that he felt as a child. As a father — including being the dad of Will Wagner, an infielder who debuted with the Blue Jays in 2024 — he was driven to be present in large part because he wished his father had been more present in his life.

The wait for the Hall of Fame call was excruciating for a man who admittedly is low on patience. He privately bristled as some questioned his Hall of Fame credentials. Then on Jan. 21, 2025, the importance of the Hall of Fame honor was evident as the outspoken Wagner was left speechless by the call from the BBWAA's Jack O'Connell and Hall of Fame Chairman of the Board Jane Forbes Clark.

With two of his children at their house in Crozet, Va., Wagner couldn't even mouth a hello. He was so overcome, he sobbed while he held his smartphone to his ear with his powerful left hand and listened. With his right hand, he wiped away his tears.

Wagner's wife of 30 years gently rubbed his back as he cried. The video of Wagner sobbing became viral, showing baseball fans just how much the Hall of Fame honor means to him.

"This shows that you can dream," he said. "This shows kids from southwest Virginia and Division III that they can dream about making the Hall of Fame one day. It's just really hard to put into words. I don't know how you even expect anything like this when you come from southwest Virginia."

In Wagner's case, though, he actually did believe this was possible. He always believed in himself even when others may have doubted. He bristled after his beloved Astros traded him to the Phillies following the 2003 season. His two years in Philadelphia included an All-Star appearance in 2005 when he led the majors in games finished (70) and had a minuscule 1.51 ERA.

Yet, even now, the top three memories of his career were all in an Astros uniform. The top one was his debut at Shea Stadium. His second favorite memory was the Astros' historic six-pitcher no-hitter he closed out at old Yankee Stadium on June 11, 2003.

Wagner still has the ball of the final out from that game, which was the first six-pitcher no-hitter in MLB history. His third favorite memory was the night in 2003 when he became the Astros' all-time saves leader, breaking Dave Smith's club record of 199.

When he signed with the Mets before the 2006 season, Wagner told then-team owner Fred Wilpon that he wanted to play there because he knew that succeeding in Queens might help him get into the Hall of Fame.

"To get to the Hall of Fame, I have to go through New York," Wagner remembers saying to Wilpon.

Wagner had 101 saves and two All-Star berths over four years with the Mets. He collected his 300th career save in a Mets uniform and his 400th career save in a Braves uniform. Then he went home and waited. Fifteen years later, 10 of them on the Hall of Fame ballot, Wagner is overwhelmed to know he finally is headed to Cooperstown.

The wait is over.

Cooperstown PHLASHBACK

As the Hall of Fame welcomes two former Phillies into its ranks this July, it marks the 30th anniversary of the induction of another pair of Phils. Third baseman Mike Schmidt, voted in on his first ballot, and center fielder Richie Ashburn, selected by the Veterans Committee, were enshrined on July 30, 1995. An estimated throng of 28,000, at the time the largest crowd for an induction ceremony, descended on Cooperstown for the festivities.

WRIGLEY REWIND

Ten years ago, Cole Hamels capped off his Phillies career in memorable fashion

BY DILLON SIDDIQI

It was a sunny day at the Friendly Confines on July 25, 2015. The Phillies were sitting at a 35-63 record and getting ready to take on the Chicago Cubs in game two of a three-game weekend series. The trade deadline was days away and the rumors around the team were swirling. A handful of names were being tossed around as potential targets on the Phillies roster, but none more so than ace Cole Hamels.

Hamels, a first-round pick in 2002, led the Phillies to their second World Series title in 2008 while winning MVP honors in both the NLCS and Fall Classic in the process. He also helped the organization capture back-to-back National League pennants and five consecutive division titles. He had spent 10 years with the club and been a standout through it all. He would finish his Phillies career with the third-most strikeouts in franchise history, the fourth-most starts and the fifth-most wins.

But the team was in a rebuilding period and the 31-year-old Hamels had three years remaining on his contract with a club option for a fourth year. Most importantly, he had plenty left in the tank and he put that on display when he tossed the 13th no-hitter in Phillies history.

When the Phillies took the field against the Cubs on that Saturday afternoon, many expected it to be Hamels' last game with the Phillies. Hamels was coming off two starts in which he allowed a combined 14 runs in 6.1 innings of work, but when he went to the bullpen to warm up that afternoon, he could feel that this start was going to be different.

"I came off two games where I was really struggling and I knew that I could get traded any day and that a lot of things were in the works. I just wanted to get my rhythm back because I knew that any team I went to was probably going to be in the playoff hunt so I needed to have my stuff," Hamels said. "I noticed right from the first pitch in the bullpen that it just felt right. The ball kept going exactly where I wanted it to. [Carlos] Ruiz was barely moving his glove and so I think he could kind of feel it. He was like, 'Whoa, you have your feel,' and then it just became about taking it to the game."

It was 80 degrees at first pitch with a recorded wind of 14 mph blowing in from right field. That wind, which carries its own reputation at Wrigley Field, would be helping Hamels that day.

"I had some pretty good games at Wrigley before that where the wind was in my favor. You learn how to pitch with the wind and you hear all the stories where if you ever get in trouble and the wind is blowing in just reset yourself and throw it right down the middle. Most of the time guys are going to hit it and it's not going to go out. So just knowing you have that in the back of your head gives you a sort of extra added confidence that you can get away with something and you don't have to be so precise," Hamels said.

With the wind at his back and his command locked in, Hamels came out of the gate firing. He averaged 92.9 mph on his four-seam fastball in the 2015 season, which was the fastest of his career. But on that day, he averaged 94.8 mph on his fastball, which was his best of the season and the second-best of any game in his career. Phillies right-hander Aaron Nola, who was scheduled to make his second career start the next day, was sitting in the dugout watching Hamels pitch for the first time in person.

"I remember that game and he was pumping 95, 96 and a couple of days later I said, 'Dude, when did you start hitting mid-90s consistently?'" Nola said.

After walking the first batter he faced, Dexter Fowler, Hamels settled into cruise control. Besides another walk to Fowler in the sixth inning, Hamels did not allow another base runner. He racked up strikeout after strikeout, notching 13 total on the day, which was tied for the second-most he ever recorded in a game and the first time he reached that mark in five years.

Hamels had pitched in a combined no-hitter against Atlanta the previous season but came out following the sixth inning. So when the lefty eclipsed that mark this time and remained in the game, the thoughts about what this start could be began to creep in.

"When I got through the sixth inning, I thought, 'Oh, this is the longest I've ever gone without giving up a hit. This is pretty cool.' I just tried to stay within myself because you don't really anticipate it happening. You want it but you just kind of push it aside," Hamels said. "So after that sixth inning I was like, 'Alright, this is fun. I'm just going to keep doing this.' You just start building some confidence and thinking about one pitch at a time, one batter at a time and let's see what we can do here."

The thought of a no-hitter in his head entering the seventh inning, Hamels struck out the side. Then the eighth inning was dicey. With one out in the bottom of the frame, 14-year veteran David Ross smoked a high fastball to the warning track in left-center field. Phillies center fielder Odúbel

Herrera made an excellent diving catch just in front of the ivy to preserve the no-hitter.

"You have to have one big play in the game for you to recognize that things are going your way and that was one of them. I got away with a pitch right there. I know Ross was trying to hit it out of the park and Odúbel just made a great play," Hamels said.

Kyle Schwarber pinch-hit for pitcher James Russell in the next at-bat. The lefty slugger was only playing in his 15th career game but had already developed a reputation for mashing fastballs.

"I knew Schwarber could hit the fastball. So I had to think about how I wanted to set him up. I thought, why don't I throw him a cutter, something that looks like a fastball and he's going to swing out of his shoes. He understands the situation. He's going to want to jump on something early because he watched the last six innings of the game and all my off-speed pitches were pretty good and he didn't want to see that," Hamels said. "I threw a cutter on the outer half and let it run and got it off the end of the bat right to me and it was hard. But if that was a fastball, he would've ripped it off the wall."

"I think it was going to be out anyways," Schwarber said. "I hit it decent, right back at him, but he snagged it."

With a Gold Glove-worthy play to rob his future teammate, Hamels needed just three more outs.

A weak ground ball and a strikeout to start the ninth inning brought the accomplishment within one out. History was on the line for the Phillies ace with a decade of success under his belt. Iconic Wrigley Field had not been witness to a no-hitter in over 40 years. Nola, who would take over the title of Phillies ace in the coming years and establish himself as one of the franchise's all-time great pitchers, was watching nervously from the dugout and panicking about a superstition.

"I remember sitting in the dugout watching Cole and I was eating seeds and I ran out," Nola recalled. "I was superstitious back then and I was sitting next to Adam Morgan and eating seeds all game and Cole kept getting outs. I ran out and then Cole got to the last hitter and my hands were sweating. I was just thinking, 'Come on, man, I'm out of seeds! Just pull this out!'"

Kris Bryant stood at the plate for the Cubs' last at-bat. He had worked the count full when Hamels made a surprising decision.

"For one of the only times in my career, I threw a 3-2 curveball," Hamels said. "I was at the point where I was feeling confident in anything and everything I had that day and that I could throw anything for a strike, even a count that's not in my favor. Why not now? Chooch was really excited about it and I was like, alright, let's execute. I don't think anyone had in their scouting reports that I throw a 3-2 curveball."

From 2008 (when MLB began keeping pitch-tracking data) to his last start before his no-hitter, Hamels had thrown 1066 pitches in a 3-2 count. He only threw 15 curveballs, roughly one percent of the time.

"I thought I could surprise Bryant but I kind of hung it," said Hamels. "When he hit it, I thought, 'Of course. That's gone. Of course.' So I'm beating myself up a little bit and I just turn around and I'm watching it and I think, 'What is going on?'"

Bryant barreled that curveball with an exit velocity of 102.8 mph at a 28 degree launch angle. The ball carried 387 feet. It was a swing that could send a ball out of the park on most days. But those pesky winds at Wrigley decided to help Hamels one more time and knock the ball down at the warning track. Herrera, who was sprinting hard to the ivy, suddenly found that he was overrunning the ball. He stopped in his tracks, kicked up a dust storm in the process, dove to the ground and made the catch.

"He caught it, and I laughed about it. It was so wild. Like, are you kidding? That's how we end the game?" Hamels said.

"Kris hammered that ball and we were like, 'Oh man, that has a chance to go,'" Schwarber said. "That wind blowing in hard was a really big deal because it was nearly impossible to hit one out to center field. Then you see Odúbel running back and then he slams on the brakes and falls down and we were all thinking it was going to drop but he made the catch."

With that catch, Hamels had completed the 13th no-hitter in franchise history. And in memorable fashion, it was his last start as a Phillie. Hamels was traded to the Texas Rangers on July 31. The Phillies were embracing their rebuild and had received a package of prospects in return.

Nola, the club's prized prospect, was just beginning his Phillies career. After a toast and celebration in the clubhouse after the game, Hamels asked the room, "Who goes tomorrow?" Nola, who was 22 at the time, raised his hand to roaring cheers and laughter. There were big shoes to fill for the rookie. But this game, this moment, was the perfect passing of the torch. The perfect storybook ending to a storybook Phillies career.

"It's that sort of surreal moment where you can't script it any better and sometimes that's the best part of baseball," Hamels said. "Baseball has this history and nostalgia and these sorts of fantasies coming true. You get to see the beauty of the game, but it also has this symbolic representation of life. You can use sports for life and lessons, and it was a pretty powerful one because Philly is a very special franchise."

THEY'RE STILL THE

Whiz Kids

75 years after winning the NL pennant, Philadelphia's 1950 heroes remain legends

BY BILL FRANCIS

Dubbed the "Whiz Kids" because of the youth of their key players, the upstart 1950 Philadelphia Phillies remain memorable 75 years later despite being swept by another iconic club of the era, the star-studded New York Yankees, in the Fall Classic.

Few teams captured the spirit of their era better than the team that nearly brought the city's National League franchise its first World Series title.

The Phils had trouble winning almost from their start as a National League member in 1883. Rarely finishing a campaign with a winning record, the team more often than not found themselves in the second division of an eight- or 10-team loop and posted 30 losing seasons in 31 years from 1918-48. But the tide was turning by the late 1940s, a positive change most often credited to new ownership, a front office shakeup, a midseason change at manager and an influx of young talent.

Along with the Junior Circuit's Philadelphia Athletics, the two Philly teams shared the same ballpark, Shibe Park, since midseason 1938. While the A's under longtime manager and owner Connie Mack had periods of success over the decades, including most recently three straight World Series appearances and two titles between 1929 and '31, their NL counterparts had never won a world championship while only winning one pennant when the 1915 aggregation was led by future Hall of Famer Grover Cleveland Alexander's 31 victories.

Under the stewardship of Bob Carpenter, who acquired the Phillies in 1943, and the shrewd front office leadership of Herb Pennock, the onetime southpaw for the A's who made his name as a Yankees hurler in the 1920s and was named general manager of the franchise in December 1943, the groundwork was laid and the future looked bright. By 1949, the team, at 81-73, had their first above .500 mark since 1932.

Led by skipper Eddie Sawyer, who replaced Ben Chapman in July 1948, the Phillies had a youth movement taking place on the diamond, supported by a few important veteran leaders, as the 1950 season got underway. Unfortunately, Pennock wouldn't live to see it, as the man who had acquired most of the team's talent passed away in 1948, the same year he would be inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame.

Robin Roberts, Eddie Sawyer and Richie Ashburn

After an inauspicious start, the 1950 Phillies won 11 of 13 in early May to place them above .500 – where they would remain for the rest of the season – but also gave them their first taste of first place among the eight NL teams. Overall, they would spend 113 days during the '50 campaign in the top spot, an unfamiliar spot for this franchise.

Despite this unprecedented success, baseball writers persisted in referring to them as the "Phutile Phils." Their prior Modern Era history, which included finishing in last place 17 times, almost demanded it.

The colorful moniker, the "Whiz Kids," was apt for this team, with most of their roster aged 25 or younger, including third baseman Willie "Puddin' Head" Jones (24), shortstop Granny Hamner (23), outfielders Del Ennis (25) and Richie Ashburn (23), and starting pitchers Robin Roberts (23), Bob Miller (24), Bubba Church (25) and Curt Simmons (21).

They had a combination of youth and experience, though, with veteran contributions coming from first baseman Eddie Waitkus (30), second baseman Mike Goliat (28), outfielder Dick Sisler (29), catcher Andy Seminick (29) and relief ace Jim Konstanty (33).

"They call this team the 'Whiz Kids,'" said 35-year-old reserve outfielder Bill Nicholson. "But me … Jim Konstanty – we're the 'Was Kids.'"

In particular, the youthful starting mound crew benefited greatly from both Konstanty, who would set a then-MLB record with 74 appearances while winning 16 games and saving 22 more, and Seminick, whose knowledge of opposing hitters helped the young staff and whose bat, which walloped 24 home runs, provided needed power.

After a wait of 35 years for something to cheer about, no one blamed the fans for being enthusiastic. For only the second time in their history, the Phillies went over the one million mark in attendance, 1,217,035. Even sheet music of a marching song, "The Fightin' Phils," became a bestseller in the city.

Del Ennis

The Phillies won the flag on the last day of the season in dramatic fashion. Two weeks after holding their largest lead, 7½ games on Sept. 20, they faced the Dodgers at Ebbets Field on Oct. 1 in the final game of the regular season with a one-game lead on Brooklyn. The Phillies had lost five in a row entering the game.

Hoping to avoid a playoff, the Phils were tied with the Dodgers, 1-1, going into the ninth inning. The game remained even when Brooklyn's Cal Abrams was thrown out at the plate by Ashburn after Duke Snider singled with two on and no outs. Roberts then escaped the jam without allowing a run.

The next inning, in the top of the 10th, Sisler clubbed a three-run homer to deep left field off Don Newcombe to give Philadelphia a 4-1 lead it would not relinquish. Sisler, who had three hits in the game prior to his heroics, was the son of Hall of Famer George Sisler, who was a Dodgers front office executive at the time and sitting behind the Dodgers' dugout when his son connected.

The 1950 Phillies won the pennant with a 91-63 record, a season after coming in third at 81-73, 16 games back of Brooklyn. It was the first time the Phillies had consecutive winning seasons since 1915-17.

"Build up a fellow's confidence and you build up his ability," is how Sawyer once explained his philosophy. "Knock him all the time, his confidence disappears and the battle is lost."

Though they would be swept in the World Series, the Phillies were game throughout – losing the first three by one run each and the finale by three.

Jim Konstanty

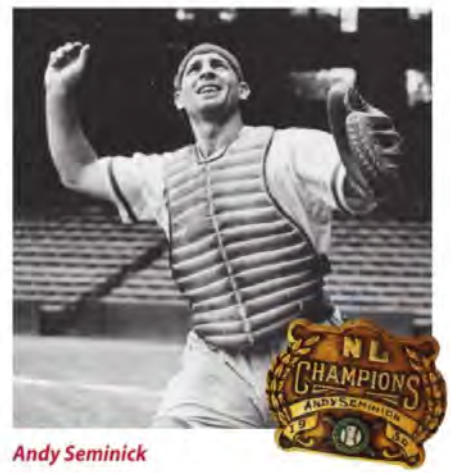
BBWAA Career Excellence Award honoree Shirley Povich, in a column from the day the World Series began, joked about the perceived mismatch: "I like the Yankees to win it, but I don't possibly see how they can do it in less than four games."

The star-studded Yankees included future Hall of Famers Casey Stengel, Yogi Berra, Joe DiMaggio, Whitey Ford, Johnny Mize and Phil Rizzuto. Cooperstown-bound Phillies numbered Ashburn and Roberts.

Phillies southpaw Curt Simmons was not available for the Fall Classic, his National Guard unit activated just before the Series. He had finished the regular season with 17 wins and a 3.40 earned run average. The 1950 World Series was also a matchup of league Most Valuable Players: Rizzuto batted .324 and scored 125 runs, while Konstanty compiled a 16-7 record with a 2.66 ERA.

"The way I set it up in my mind," Konstanty said, "every hitter I face is in a slump."

Konstanty, who had pitched in relief all season, started Game 1 for Philadelphia and lost, 1-0, to Vic Raschi, while Robin Roberts, a 20-game winner during the season, dropped a 2-1 game to Allie Reynolds when DiMaggio homered in the 10th inning. Game 3 was tied in the bottom of the ninth when Jerry Coleman won it with an RBI single off of reliever Russ Meyer. Hall of Famer Whitey Ford, only 21 at the time, started the clinching game and got the win.



Andy Seminick

For the Yankees, it was their second straight title, their 13th in 17 chances, and another sweep added to the ones achieved in 1927, 1928, 1932, 1938 and 1939.

"Pitching was the story of this series," said Sawyer, who spent time in the upstate New York area near Cooperstown – having attended Ithaca College and received his master's degree from Cornell University prior to managing in the minors with Binghamton and Utica. "Excepting for Raschi's job in the first game, I don't think their pitching was much better than ours, if any. But, as I said before, all our mistakes cost us."

The five pitchers used by the Yankees in the World Series had a combined 0.73 ERA. Of the 16 total runs scored by both teams, only five were tallied by Philadelphia.

The Game 1 start by Konstanty, the bespectacled righty who later in life opened a sporting goods store in Oneonta, N.Y., a 20-minute drive from the Baseball Hall of Fame, was his first in the majors since 1946. With Simmons unavailable, Sawyer bypassed Roberts, who would have been working on just two days' rest.

The rubber-armed Konstanty, a control pitcher with a slider and palm ball, had pitched nine innings of relief against Pittsburgh on Aug. 25 and 10 relief innings in a 19-inning game against Cincinnati on Sept. 15.

"That slowball and the control and the confidence really does something to every batter in the league," said Waitkus. "They sort of roll over and play dead. He pitches to them like they're all off-balance – and I'm sure they are."

Writing for the Philadelphia Daily News in 1986, Ashburn, who would go on to become a beloved broadcaster for the Phillies, tried to explain the hold the Whiz Kids had on the Philadelphia faithful.

"The Whiz Kids never should be confused with the Yankees of the late '20s, the Brooklyn Dodgers of the early '50s, the Milwaukee Braves of the late '50s or the Cincinnati Reds of the late '70s," Ashburn wrote. "Those clubs were legitimate dynasties in baseball. The Whiz Kids were a young team that won a National League pennant one time and then proceeded to lose the World Series to the New York Yankees in four consecutive games.

"Despite this, the Whiz Kids have endured and seem to have endeared themselves in the hearts of Phillies baseball fans everywhere. Maybe it was the long dry spell of winning baseball in Philadelphia. The third place '49 Phillies, led by manager Eddie Sawyer, signaled a stretch of some pretty good baseball at Connie Mack Stadium. Indeed, Sawyer called a meeting after the final game of that season and told the players, 'We didn't win this year, but we had the best team in the league the last half of the season.'

"He added: 'Come back next spring ready to win.'"

J-ROLL OF HONOR

Former shortstop Jimmy Rollins prepares to take his place among the Phillies' all-time greats

BY KEVIN GREGG

In a tradition perhaps as old as the game itself, Major League Baseball teams have hosted caravans to generate interest and excitement for the upcoming season in the dead of winter. With spring training on the horizon, teams like the Phillies would – and still do – schedule promotional and community events at which players, front office staff and broadcasters appear in and around the Philadelphia area.

On Jan. 23, 2007, as part of their winter caravan, the Phillies held a luncheon at Citizens Bank Park for the club's beat reporters. Prior to the luncheon, the club made a few players and team personnel available for interviews, but one media availability generated plenty of interest and headlines.

Heading into the 2007 campaign, the Phillies had not qualified for the postseason in the previous 13 years, but that didn't stop one of the club's players from boldly and confidently proclaiming, "For the first time since I've been here, I think we are the team to beat in the NL East."

Nearly 20 years later, that quote conjures up memories of one of the most remarkable individual seasons in team history and has come to epitomize shortstop Jimmy Rollins, who will be inducted into the Toyota Phillies Wall of Fame this summer as one of the best players to ever wear the red pinstripes.

With their second-round pick in the 1996 MLB Draft (46th overall), the Phillies selected James Calvin Rollins, an athletic and smooth-fielding switch-hitting infielder out of Encinal High School in Alameda, Calif.

Mike Arbuckle, who oversaw the Phillies' amateur draft in 1996, recalled the club's thought process when selecting Rollins.

"We saw a kid that had good tools for the game," Arbuckle said. "He had great energy, which we really liked, and he just had that 'it' factor. It's an inner confidence with the way kids carry themselves where you can just tell they believe in themselves and that they've got a good chance to succeed. It was all those ingredients that made us say, let's take him here."

After signing, Rollins began his professional career with the Martinsville Phillies, the club's rookie-ball affiliate in rural Virginia. While the highly acclaimed prospect was known mostly for his defensive prowess and speed, Rollins' potent offensive abilities emerged as he ascended through the minor league ranks. And, near the end of his fifth season, the Phillies brought Rollins to the majors.

"At that point, everybody thought he was ready from the standpoint of plate discipline, feel for the game and overall maturity," Arbuckle said.

On Sept. 17, 2000, a 21-year-old Rollins was penciled into manager Terry Francona's starting lineup at shortstop for his major league debut against the Florida Marlins.

Rollins, who always possessed a flair for the dramatic, immediately displayed his potential when he tripled in his first plate appearance. On the day, the shortstop reached base safely three times, stole a base and scored a pair of runs in a 6-5 Phillies win at Veterans Stadium.

Rollins' successful debut was one of a few bright spots for the team in the 2000 season and it offered Phillies fans a glimpse of the future. In Francona's postgame media session that afternoon, he told reporters, "You certainly don't judge a guy on one game, but it looks like with his speed and what he does at shortstop, it may give us another dimension. It's just a matter of when he's ready."

By season's end, Rollins' readiness was confirmed. Baseball America had labeled him the club's top prospect heading into the 2001 campaign which is when the Phillies made Rollins their everyday shortstop and he was selected to his first All-Star team.

From that point on, Rollins proved to be one of the Phillies' most dependable and productive players.

"I'm a big believer that talent rules the day, but character and makeup matter," said Ed Wade, who served as Phillies vice president and general manager from 1998-2005. "Jimmy certainly had the hat trick when it came to those three attributes. He has always had a high degree of self-confidence, but he also absorbed information from veteran teammates and grew under the tutelage of his managers. Jimmy was one of the leaders of that young core nucleus which arrived in the big leagues at just the right time."

Over the years, Rollins was often referred to as a "red-light player" by some in the organization for his ability to shine in the biggest and most critical moments.

Among his countless career highlights was the game-ending double play he turned against the Washington Nationals on Sept. 27, 2008. His diving stop up the middle to snare a potential game-tying hit was flipped to teammate Chase Utley to seal the win that clinched the NL East Division title on the penultimate day of the season.

"I'M A BIG BELIEVER THAT TALENT RULES THE DAY, BUT CHARACTER AND MAKEUP MATTER. JIMMY CERTAINLY HAD THE HAT TRICK WHEN IT CAME TO THOSE THREE ATTRIBUTES."

Another was his two-out, two-run, walk-off double in the bottom of the ninth inning off Jonathan Broxton in Game 4 of the 2009 National League Championship Series which erased the Los Angeles Dodgers' 4-3 lead and put the Phillies ahead three games to one in front of a jam-packed Citizens Bank Park.

While not a singular moment, Rollins' entire 2007 season elevated him to legendary status as a Phillie. After placing a target on his back with his "We're the team to beat" comment in January, Rollins delivered a season for the record books. The shortstop appeared in all 162 games and batted .296 with 38 doubles, 20 triples, 30 home runs, 94 RBI, 139 runs scored and 41 stolen bases as the Phillies bested the New York Mets for the NL East title on the final day of the regular season. During the Phillies' division-clinching win against Washington that same day, Rollins hit his 20th triple of the year to deliver yet another memorable moment.

"Jimmy's ability to hold down shortstop for us, especially with how deep the talent was at that position across the league, speaks volumes," said former teammate and close friend Ryan Howard. "Jimmy may not have been as big as some of the other shortstops, but he played just as big and he never feared being in the spotlight. He wanted to be at the plate, he wanted to make that big play and he wanted to be in a position to change the game. Jimmy was built for those big moments."

Following his extraordinary season, Rollins was named the NL's Most Valuable Player by the Baseball Writers' Association of America. More importantly for the Phillies, though, Rollins' individual performance and the team's breakthrough in 2007 signaled the beginning of what has been to date the most successful stretch in franchise history.

"I think that [quote] gave insight for people into how Jimmy thought about our team and what we were building," said former teammate Pat Burrell. "He drew a line in the sand and said we're going to do this, and, to his credit, we did. And he led the charge. He talked the talk and he backed it up. Nobody was better when the red light was on."

The city of Philadelphia was in a euphoric state when the Phillies snapped their 13-year playoff drought in 2007, but that feeling dissipated quickly when an upstart Colorado Rockies team ended the Phillies' season with a sweep in the National League Division Series. Despite the loss, the Phillies' young core of homegrown players led by Rollins, Utley, Howard and Cole Hamels was destined for greatness. The following season, the Phillies defeated the Tampa Bay Rays to win the franchise's second World Series title, ending a 28-year title drought for the organization and 25-year drought for the city. The following year, the Phillies continued their superior form as they captured their second straight NL pennant and in the two subsequent seasons, the club posted the best record in baseball.

A key contributor to all the success was Rollins, who excelled for the club at a vital defensive position in shortstop and was also the team's spark plug as its leadoff hitter.

Utley, Rollins' double-play partner and teammate for 12 seasons, knew Rollins' value first-hand.

"The shortstop – especially at the major league level – has the greatest impact on the game of any position player," Utley said, "so it's no coincidence that we had so much success when Jimmy was on the field. He was our offensive spark plug that set the tone for everything we accomplished. Beyond his talent, Jimmy had a unique ability to instill confidence throughout the

6 THINGS YOU CAN DO FOR WILDLIFE

1 LET WILDLIFE BE WILD

Springtime means wildlife like rabbit kits, nestling songbirds, and deer fawns are born! If you spot newborn or young wildlife, please do not disturb them. While some young animals might appear to be abandoned, many wildlife parents will leave their young alone and hidden to avoid attracting predators, only coming back to nurse them a few times a day.

2 PLANT NATIVE PLANTS

Planting native trees, shrubs, and flowers provides both food and cover, for many wildlife species. Native plants benefit birds, bats, bees, butterflies, beetles, and small mammals, which play an important role in sustaining healthy ecosystems. Non-native or invasive plants can have harmful ecological impacts because they outcompete native plant species and do not provide nearly as many benefits to wildlife.

3 INSTALL A NEST BOX

Placing a nest box on your property can provide safe nesting areas for many species of birds and small mammals to raise their young. Properly managed nest boxes can be critically important to cavity-nesting species like blue birds, prothonotary warblers, and purple martins.

4 CREATE LEAF & BRUSH PILES FOR HABITAT

Songbirds, small mammals, reptiles, and amphibians, will use brush piles for nesting, resting, escaping from predators, and sheltering from harsh weather conditions.

5 SECURE FOOD, GARBAGE & RECYCLING

Once a bear finds easy access to food, they are likely to come back for more. To limit human-bear interactions, be sure to bring pet food containers and bird feeders inside at night; keep trash cans and recycle bins inside until collection day; and regularly clean and remove grease from outside grills.

6 SLOW THE MOW

Wait until after nesting season to begin mowing fallow fields and large yards to benefit a variety of grassland-nesting bird species and support pollinators like bees, moths, and bats. Being a lazy lawnmower and only cutting grass every 2-3 weeks can also lead to more lawn flowers that attract a diversity of pollinators to boost wildlife habitat.

clubhouse, pushing all of us to elevate our game."

Rollins' ability to stay on the field over his time with the Phillies was among his most valuable qualities. Beginning in 2001, when he took over at short, through the end of his Phillies career in 2014, Rollins appeared in 2,076 of the Phillies' 2,267 team games, roughly 92 percent. In that 14-season span, only two players in the major leagues appeared in more games than Rollins did.

"Jimmy played such a big part of our success in those years," said his longtime manager Charlie Manuel. "He was a tremendous athlete with a big personality, and he brought energy to the ballpark every day. He loved playing in front of our fans, and they really got behind him. But it really was the players that made us go and that began with Jimmy."

Rollins' contributions didn't just come on the field. He brought intangibles to his Phillies teams off the field too.

"Jimmy had style and a swagger that translated to all of us in just building confidence and having fun in the clubhouse," said Hamels. "But when you would see him out on the field, he was all business. He was so smart, and he had an amazing baseball IQ. He was one of the best players that you could ever have as a teammate behind you because he built your confidence."

Once he established himself as a Phillie, "J-Roll" became a fan favorite in Philadelphia. His style, charisma, sense of humor and smile made him appear so much larger than his 5-foot-7 frame.

"When you're playing sports," Rollins once said in an interview, "height is neutralized by talent and heart. I never saw myself as a little guy."

That adulation from the fan base only grew as he and the team assembled an impressive collection of awards and achievements.

Within the industry, Rollins was recognized as a three-time NL All-Star (2001-02; 2005), a four-time Gold Glove Award winner (2007-09; 2012), a Silver Slugger Award winner (2007) and co-recipient of MLB's prestigious Roberto Clemente Award (2014).

In the Phillies record books, Rollins stands as the club's all-time hits leader (2,306), a feat he achieved in 2014 when he surpassed Hall of Famer Mike Schmidt. Rollins also has the most doubles (479) in team history and ranks second in games played (2,090) and steals (453) and is third in runs (1,325) and triples (111). No Phillies shortstop has hit more career home runs than Rollins' 214 and his 46 career leadoff homers are also a franchise record. Rollins' 38-game hitting streak over the 2005-06 seasons is also a Phillies record. To date, Rollins remains the only shortstop in major league history to finish his career with at least 200 homers and 400 stolen bases.

"There's nothing Jimmy couldn't do," said Phillies legend Larry Bowa, who also managed Rollins. "An excellent defender. He could steal a base and hit a ball out of the ballpark. And it was all through hard work. He became one of the best shortstops I have ever seen. I think he's not only a Wall of Famer, but he's a Hall of Famer as well."

Time will tell if Rollins will be enshrined in Cooperstown or not. He certainly has a compelling argument in his favor. But in the meantime, Phillies fans will have the chance to celebrate the charismatic and confident Rollins this summer when he's formally recognized as one of the Phillies' all-time greats.

CALL TO THE WALL

Former general manager Ed Wade joins the Toyota Phillies Wall of Fame

BY LARRY SHENK

"2008 would not have happened without the players scouted and signed by Ed Wade and his staff. Their fingerprints are all over the World Series trophy."

– Baseball Hall of Fame Executive Pat Gillick

A kid from tiny Carbondale, Pa., is the newest executive to be immortalized on the Toyota Phillies Wall of Fame. Ed Wade, who began his career path playing baseball in the city's Russell Park, will have his crowning moment take place at Citizens Bank Park, where his bronze plaque will be unveiled on Aug. 1.

As assistant GM (1989-97), interim GM (December 1997) and GM (1998-2004), Wade faced the task of rebuilding the Phillies. Thanks in part to two outstanding scouting directors, Mike Arbuckle (1998-2001) and Marti Wolever (2002-05), the process produced.

The Phillies drafted and developed nine of the players on the 2008 World Series roster, eight while Wade oversaw baseball operations. Manager Charlie Manuel was hired by Wade in 2004, replacing the popular Larry Bowa. Manuel would go on to be the winningest manager in franchise history.

Jimmy Rollins was drafted in 1996, the year before Wade took the reins from Lee Thomas. J-Roll was followed by Carlos Ruiz, Pat Burrell and Ryan Madson (1998), Brett Myers (1999), Chase Utley (2000), Ryan Howard (2001), Cole Hamels (2002) and Kyle Kendrick (2003).

Another key member of that championship team was Shane Victorino, who was a 2004 Rule 5 Draft selection on the recommendation of Mike Ondo, the club's director of professional scouting. Wade, along with Ruben Amaro Jr., his assistant, convinced Victorino to stay in the organization even though he could have taken his free agency after not making the Opening Day roster in '05.

As an assistant GM, Wade was instrumental in the 1997 trade for Bobby Abreu, who became a Phillies Wall of Fame player. Wade had seen him play while on a minor league scouting mission. Once Abreu was selected by Tampa Bay in the expansion draft, Thomas acquired him for shortstop Kevin Stocker at Wade's recommendation.

Meanwhile, plans were ongoing for the Phillies to exit Veterans Stadium and move into a new home, Citizens Bank Park, in 2004. Wade played a key role in designing both the home and visiting team clubhouses, dugouts and bullpens.

With the new ballpark, additional revenue would allow the Phillies to get good and stay good. Wade signed free agent first baseman Jim Thome to a six-year, $85 million contract after the 2002 season, fulfilling the team's promise to its fans that spending would increase. Thome's signing triggered the acquisitions of veterans Billy Wagner, Kevin Millwood, David Bell, Jon Lieber and Kenny Lofton.

Early Path

Wade began his 42-year baseball career as an intern with the Phillies public relations department on Feb. 1, 1977, one day after his 21st birthday. He shared a room on the executive level at the Vet with a large copier and Dave Raymond, a promotions department intern. Raymond went on to become the Phillie Phanatic the following season. Wade often kidded, "I was a heartbeat away from becoming the Phanatic."

Wade's job description: copy standings, statistics and home and visiting team game notes, copy press releases and stuff them in envelopes for mailing, master clearing copier jams, type play-by-play during games, copy and distribute postgame notes to the media. And anything else.

Compensation: "$2.50 per hour and all the Tastykakes I could eat," he often joked.

Biggest life change: Meeting usherette Roxanne Fanfarillo. They were married in 1981, with Garry Maddox serving as the best man. During the bachelor party, Ed had too much to drink. "Haven't had a drink of liquor since," he laughs.

The internship ended when the Phillies' season ended with a playoff loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers. Bill Giles, then executive vice president, arranged for Wade to have an interview during the World Series with the Houston Astros for the position of a PR assistant. Wade was hired and advanced to director in 1979. He returned to Pennsylvania two years later and spent five seasons as the Pittsburgh Pirates' PR director.

Path Changes

In 1986, Wade returned to Houston as an associate for Tal Smith Enterprises, a firm that provided consulting services for MLB clubs, mainly preparation of arbitration cases, financial appraisals of franchises, contract negotiations and other baseball-related matters. Wade worked for the company until May 5, 1989, when he rejoined the Phillies as an assistant to Thomas.

After leaving the Phillies in 2005, he was a pro scout for the San Diego Padres for two years. With Smith back as the Astros president, Wade was named general manager on Sept. 20, 2007. He went through another rebuild, trading veteran players for prospects. The Astros were sold following the 2011 season, and Smith and Wade were one of many changes made by the new owner. At the time, there were 43 players in the organization who went on to play in the major leagues, a testament to Wade.

Wade came back to the Phillies in December 2011 as a special consultant and professional scout. He remained with the team until the end of the 2017 season.

Ed's Profile

He began playing baseball as a 4-year-old in Carbondale's Little League programs. Following graduation from St. Rose High School in 1973, he enrolled in Temple University and graduated in 1977 with a major in journalism. While at Temple, he completed internships with the Scranton Times, Williamsport Sun-Gazette, Philadelphia Bulletin and The Associated Press office in Philadelphia.

He's included among the 15 most notable Carbondale residents, a list that starts with James Archbald, who was elected the city's first mayor in 1851.

Roxanne and Ed reside in Sewell, N.J. They have a son, Ryan; two daughters, Erin Ayala (Jose) and Maureen Roderick (Mark), and four grandchildren, Ramon, Lorenzo and Reina Ayala and Genevieve Roderick.

Following retirement, Wade took advantage of his journalism degree. He's written two novels, which he self-published on Amazon Kindle, Delayed Honor (2012) and Preserved Honor (2024), a sequel to the first book. Both books are non-sports action/thrillers and are set in a fictitious town in Northeastern Pennsylvania. Explaining why he chose to write, "It beats watching daytime TV."

Wade also earned his Class "A" skydiving license, having been taught how to skydive by Nix White and other members of the Leap Frogs, the Navy SEALs Parachute Team. He finished his skydiving endeavors with 43 jumps. An avid runner, Wade has finished three full marathons, the Marine Corps Marathon in Washington, D.C., twice and the Houston Marathon.

A personal note: While Ed was an intern in 1977, his mother called, appreciative of my giving him a chance to be in baseball. The conversation included a humorous request, "Ed doesn't care for green beans. Just wondering if you might be able coax him." I assured her I would try. A fun challenge. During his wedding reception, I had a plate of green beans delivered to the head table. The beans went unnoticed. I failed.

Larry Shenk is a former longtime vice president of public relations for the Phillies.

ED WADE TESTIMONIALS

"Ed's contributions to the Phillies were game-changing, as he developed most of our core players from the teams that won five straight NL East championship titles from 2007 to 2011, including the 2008 World Series champions. We look forward to celebrating Ed's tremendous career as we recognize him on that historic day."

– John Middleton

"Ed Wade was and is the most professional person I've ever been around. He is respectful to all people, and particularly the game of baseball. He never took credit for anything and almost always took the blame for anything that happened with the organization.

"His goal was to get good and stay good. He knew the power and the importance of building from within. He did it in Philadelphia and Houston. Phillies fans should always be indebted. Pat Gillick acknowledged that when he hoisted the World Series trophy."

– Ruben Amaro Jr.

"Ed was a really good listener who utilized all his baseball staff in making decisions. He was always willing to put the long-term health of the franchise ahead of doing stopgap moves that might have extended his own personal tenure."

– Mike Arbuckle

"Congrats to Ed on his Wall of Fame induction. He has meant a lot to the Phillies organization. Ed was a great GM and a great scout. I want to thank him for giving me an opportunity to manage the Phils."

– Larry Bowa

"Ed has done a lot in a lot of different roles, and he has always done it well and with honor. It has been my pleasure and good fortune to be with him on many steps along the way."

– Tal Smith

"Ed was instrumental in putting together the best run of wins in Phillies history. He was always accessible and a pleasure to work with. I have nothing but respect and admiration for all he accomplished in Philadelphia."

– Marti Wolever

Top 10 PROSPECTS

BY SANTINO PRIMERANO

While the 2025 Phillies roster is loaded with experienced veterans, there is plenty of young talent on the horizon in the organization's farm system to get excited about. The club's top 10 prospects list as ranked by Baseball America includes two players on the 40-man roster and four others who were non-roster invitees to spring training this year. Fans got a chance to see these players' potential in the 2025 Spring Breakout game on March 14 when Phillies Prospects defeated Pirates Prospects, 5-3. As the following players continue their professional careers, the Phillies hope they can make an impact at the major league level, for some possibly as soon as this season.

1 ANDREW PAINTER ■ RHP

Painter again finds himself atop the Phillies' top prospects list heading into 2025. After missing the last two seasons with a right elbow injury, the 22-year-old pitched in the Arizona Fall League in 2024 and reminded everyone of his potential. In six starts for the Glendale Desert Dogs, the 6-foot-7 right-hander went 2-0 with a 2.30 ERA (4 ER, 15.2 IP) and 18 strikeouts to four walks, earning AFL Pitcher of the Year honors. Painter, who has the best fastball in the Phillies farm system, according to Baseball America, is expected to make his major league debut this summer.

2 AIDAN MILLER ■ INF

Miller, 20, began climbing up the Phillies' minor league ranks in 2024, his first full professional season. In 102 combined games with single-A Clearwater, high-A Jersey Shore and double-A Reading, the right-handed batter slashed .261/.366/.446 (.812 OPS) and led all Phillies minor leaguers with 28 doubles. The starting shortstop for the National League in the 2024 All-Star Futures Game, Miller finished his season strong as he was named South Atlantic League Player of the Month in August after batting .299 with six doubles, four triples, three home runs and 16 RBI in 25 games with the BlueClaws. The Dunedin, Fla., native's performance last year earned him an invitation to spring training in 2025, making him the youngest player in camp.

4 JUSTIN CRAWFORD ■ OF

A non-roster invitee to spring training this year, Crawford had a terrific 2024 as he was named the Paul Owens Award winner, presented annually to the best hitter in the Phillies system. Across 110 games with high-A Jersey Shore and double-A Reading, the 21-year-old slashed .313/.360/.444 (.804 OPS) with 25 doubles, four triples, nine home runs, 61 RBI and 42 stolen bases. Defensively, he made just one error in 193 total chances in center field, posting a .995 fielding percentage. Bringing you the action...

As the 2025 Phillies defend their National League East title, fans can follow all the action on television, radio and online.

The Phillies are in their 28th season with NBC Sports Philadelphia, which is airing the bulk of the games this year, with other games being carried by NBC Sports Philadelphia+. All games broadcast on NBCSP and NBCSP+ feature "Phillies Pregame Live" and "Phillies Postgame Live" programming. Additional games are being aired by Philadelphia's NBC10.

Besides the local broadcasts, the Phillies are scheduled to make at least four appearances on ESPN: April 27 at the Chicago Cubs, May 11 at the Cleveland Guardians, June 22 vs. the New York Mets and July 23 vs. the Boston Red Sox. There will also be six games carried nationally on FOX: April 26 at the Cubs, June 21 vs. the Mets, June 28 at the Atlanta Braves, July 12 at the San Diego Padres, Aug. 9 at the Texas Rangers and Sept. 11 vs. the Mets. Additionally, the Phillies will be featured on the Roku Sunday Leadoff game at Washington on Aug. 17 at 11:35 a.m. and twice on Apple TV+, hosting the Los Angeles Dodgers on April 4 and the Mets on June 20. Please visit phillies.com for the most up-to-date broadcast schedule.

Fans can enjoy complete coverage of the Phillies with the NBC Sports mobile app. Authenticated NBCSP subscribers can access local market games and pre- and postgame shows, as well as live and on-demand video, podcasts and written coverage, from anywhere in the United States.

For those tuning in on the radio, all Phillies games can be heard on the team's flagship station, SportsRadio 94WIP (94.1 FM), as well as on the 15-station Phillies Radio Network throughout the tri-state area. Game broadcasts are also available through the club's website at phillies.com.

World Series champion Cole Hamels joins the television broadcast team of Tom McCarthy, John Kruk, Ben Davis, Ruben Amaro Jr., Hall of Famer Mike Schmidt and Taryn Hatcher. Scott Franzke, Larry Andersen, Gregg Murphy and Kevin Stocker are back in the radio booth, with Murphy again hosting the pre- and postgame shows on WIP.

Cole Hamels

For the 21st straight year, Phillies games are being broadcast in Spanish, airing on WTTM (1680 AM), with Bill Kulik, Oscar Budejen and Angel Castillo calling the action. Spanish-language broadcasts are also available using the SAP function during Phillies Television Network games.

This year, Mural Arts Philadelphia, in collaboration with the City of Philadelphia and the Philadelphia Phillies, will dedicate a new mural celebrating MLB All-Star Dick Allen. Renowned for his impactful Phillies tenure (1963-1969, 1975-1976) and achievements with teams like the Cardinals and White Sox, Allen is a seven-time All-Star and was recently elected to the Hall of Fame. His legacy was honored by the Phillies, who retired his No. 15 in 2020.
